

Can't You See?

By: Brandon Rahn

Can't you see?

Abortion has been lurking quietly in the shadows,
Striking swiftly and with no mercy,
Snatching lives of the innocent one by one,

Can't you see?

Now it spreads with toxicity over the country,
Like a horrific disease, consuming everything with contagion,
Blaring out the cries of tiny newborns never to take in their first breath,

Can't you see?

We now stand guilty up to our necks in the blood of harmless children,
Never to witness the light of day,
The shame put upon us is never enough to justify the deaths of the unborn,

What have these sweet souls done to deserve a death before life?

Do these loving children have parents who love them back?

Where did these lost lives go so wrong to deserve the crime inflicted upon them?

Can't you see?

The lives of millions have been silenced by this black hearted thief,
Crushing the chance of living a long and joy filled life,
Hope for them has been ripped from the grasp of their tiny hands,
Screams of desperation echo in the chilling silence,
Yet unheard by so many,

Can't you see?

We must stand together against this evil demon,
Together we must speak for those who never had the chance to open their eyes,
This heartbreaking murderous monster must fall to a nation,
That so desperately needs to become unified against this savage beast.
